

Diabetes Knowledge

Type one diabetes is an autoimmune condition where the body's immune system destroys the insulin producing cells in the pancreas.

The pancreas is a vital organ with dual roles, producing digestive enzymes to help break down food, and it makes hormones like insulin and glucagon to regulate blood glucose levels.

It's located in the upper abdomen behind the stomach. It takes about twenty four hours for your food to fully digest.